would better enjoy having some more swill given to him. But there's a difference between men and hogs—i. between most men and hogs—i. between most men and hogs.

Women's Christmas gifts to men have long been the subject of more or less joke making in the alleged "funny" papers. I should really like to know just what women actually think about some of men's holiday gifts to them. Men are less adept actors, less able to conceal their real feelings, and they're more apt to let their surprise or disappointment show. When she gives him a pair of slippers which are a sickly sort of grin and pretend to admire the shading of the very remarkable rose she's embroidered on the front. But his pretense is a poorly executed fraud, and she discovers it instanter. And then she's apt to wail weepfully, because he's "so unreasonable!" When he, on the other hand, gives her a pair of gloves two sizes too lovely; they're exactly what I wanted. How did you know what would please me the most?" And then, when she is by horself, she looks at 'em in part surprise and part sorrow and part disgust and thinks, "Of all the chumps! surprise and part sorrow and part dis-gust and thinks, "Of all the chumps! How can I lose 'em so they'll never be

Of course, this may be all a pipedream. I'm not in the secrets of the mind feminine. But I do know something about the other sort of mind and how it works. And I suspect that nine-tenths of all the trouble we have in selecting Christmas presents for others, and nine-tenths of all the misfits we're flushly suilty of come from the work flushly suilty of come from others, and nine-tenths of all the misfits we're finally guilty of, come from

Senator Rayner's Proposal.

According to French law a certain reserve is established which no test-afor can bequeath away from his off-spring. A Frenchman with one child can dispose of haif his property according to his pleasure; the other half must inevitably pass to the child. Those with two children can dispose of only one-third of their property, those with three children, of one-fourth, and so on, according to the size of the family. Stern parents occasionally seek to evade the law by subterfuge, but the disposal of property in France is hedged around with so many restrictions that family black sheep are rarely mulcted of their legal inheritance.

But suppose he is captured at the head of his government and in the midst of his people, and brought here in a United States cruiser for trial; that, too, on the assumption that he is guilty of all the crimes of which he is accused? The embarrassment of the situation would be far greater than if he were left at home. Questions would arise as to who would prosecute him, who would constitute the jury and who would execute judgment on this state prisoner if condemned.—Pfilladelphia Record.

Plenty of Small Arms.

If there are those who have taken alarmist literature so seriously as to be apprehensive of the invasion of the United States, such may derive comfort from the knowledge that the invader will not find us unarmed or compelled to fall back on fowling pieces. The Springfield armory is turning out the new service rifles at the rate of 800 a day. We must have now available in the hands of the army and militia and stored against possible emergencies well on toward 500,000 rifles of the best pattern. Our condition of "prepared-ness" is very different from what it was just before the Spanish war. We then had only enough magazine rifles to supply our small regular army. We did not have 80,000 of these weapons until the fighting with Spain was over.

This deficiency was not chargeable to this one official or that, but to the failure of congress to provide in peace against the possibility of war.—Boston
